Next Call? Med School!

NHTI
Concord's
Community College

Retiring past NHTI president
Dr. William Simonton.

Simonton retires after 42 years...see page 3.

Two generations of NHTI grads are med school bound.

Ryan Pouliot always knew he wanted to go to med school. Even as a student at Hinsdale High School, he took an EMT course and worked for his local ambulance service.

"Unfortunately," he says, "you could say I was a 'slacker' the first few years of high school, and by the time I decided I wanted to go to college, it was too late for me to correct my academic record in time to gain admission to the more competitive universities.

"So I thought I would go to paramedic school, gain some medical experience and work in an incredible job while slowly working towards medical school," says the 26-year-old newlywed. "I did some research and found out that NHTI has arguably the best paramedic program in New England."

Ryan began classes at Harvard Medical School in August, so his plan clearly worked. He is studying to become a critical-care specialist, drawn to the intensity of caring for the "sickest of the sick."

From 'Slacker' to 'Summa'

Ryan had an active and successful career at NHTI. He served on the Student Senate in 2000-01, and received the Cheryl M. Kellogg Award (given to the paramedic department's "outstanding senior") in 2002. Evidently his "slacker" days were over. He earned his A.S. in Paramedic Emergency Medicine, summa cum laude, in 2002.

"NHTI was great for me," says Ryan, "and even landed me a great job." Most NHTI paramedic students have field clinicals with Greater Lowell (MA) Emergency Medical Services, as did Ryan. A few months after graduation, the company offered Ryan a full time position.

Ryan earned his B.S. in biology and fulfilled his premed reqs at UMass Lowell, again graduating summa cum laude. Meanwhile, he took the MCAT (Medical College Admission Test) and did – as he modestly puts it – "really well" (he scored in the top 99.4 - 99.6 percentile!) and was accepted to Harvard.

Ryan has come a long way from the "slacker" days at Hinsdale High just seven years ago—even inspiring others to pursue their career dreams.

Carol Bernier, 47, is also a graduate of NHTI's paramedic program (class of '86) and an EMT at Greater Lowell EMS. She had been talking about becoming a doctor for 20 years and was motivated by Ryan to take the MCAT's. Long story short: Bernier began medical school, too, at the University of New England, Biddeford, Maine, in August.

She's considering emergency medicine, since it is closest to her experience, but as a non-traditional student ready for a change in life, she's leaving the door open.

"It's time to learn new things," she recently told the Lowell Sun. "I need the challenge now."

An Education Vacation?

Med school may be a vacation compared to regular 12- and 16-hour shifts while pursuing their education, Ryan jokes. Ben Podsiadlo, director of the paramedic department, says that Greater Lowell's is the second largest life support unit in the state, after Boston's, with more than 8,000 calls per year or about a call per hour, and 4,000 of those require advanced life support services. The hours are long and the intensity high.

Carol alone has helped deliver 71 babies, including three sets of twins, and attended every fatal fire in Lowell since 1993. Yet, she found time to serve as a registered nurse in the ER at Lawrence

General Hospital and teach as an adjunct at NHTI for six years!

Ryan has managed to maintain a number of outside interests. He is a graduate of the AMC Winter Mountaineering School, plays classical and jazz guitar, and enjoys a variety of outdoor activities, as well as reading, films, and photography. He and wife Kerri celebrated their first wedding anniversary ... just two days after he started med school!

College Honors Simonton Retires after 42 years on campus

When Bill Simonton began his career in education, all he wanted was to be a college history teacher. After 42 years on campus, he has become of a part of history at New Hampshire Technical Institute.

Dr. William Simonton was one of the founding instructors on the Concord campus when it opened its doors in 1965. In June, at age 65, he finished his career on the same campus, retiring from his position as Commissioner of the NH Community Technical College System.

Chances are you've come across Bill in one of the many roles he played during his tenure. He taught general studies to engineering technology students, coached soccer and basketball—even chaperoned student dances—at what was then a school of just a few hundred students. Bill went on to become Dean of Continuing Education and oversaw tremendous growth in the evening class programs and in the general student population, which has grown to nearly 4,000. In 1995 he became just the third president of NHTI and, in 2003, was appointed to a four-year term as Commissioner of the System.

"Bill has been instrumental in bringing about capital expansion at NHTI and throughout the System," says current NHTI President Lynn Kilchenstein, "as well as enhancing partnerships with business, secondary and post-secondary education, and advancing the mission of the colleges."

"When you help build something, it's fun to watch it grow," reminisces Simonton on his 42 years at NHTI.

An accomplished tennis player, Bill plans to compete in regional—and perhaps national—tournaments, traveling to the US Tennis Open, and visiting family around the country.

"I'm going to do a lot of things I've not been able to do for awhile," he says, "and if that gets boring, I'll work."

Simonton was feted and roasted at a reception at NHTI's Goldie Crocker Wellness Center attended by faculty, staff, alumni, family and many friends.

"He leaves behind a legacy of commitment to education and caring for students," says Kilchenstein. "He'll be missed around here."

Hot Shot

'06 grad focused on photography

Steve Arling graduated from the IT program in '07, but he, and his photography, are still hanging around campus. Steve works at the NHTI library circulation desk, and his photography was recently exhibited in the library foyer. Steve grew up in Epsom and, a US Army and Operation Iraqi Freedom veteran, picked up photography while stationed in Korea a few years ago.

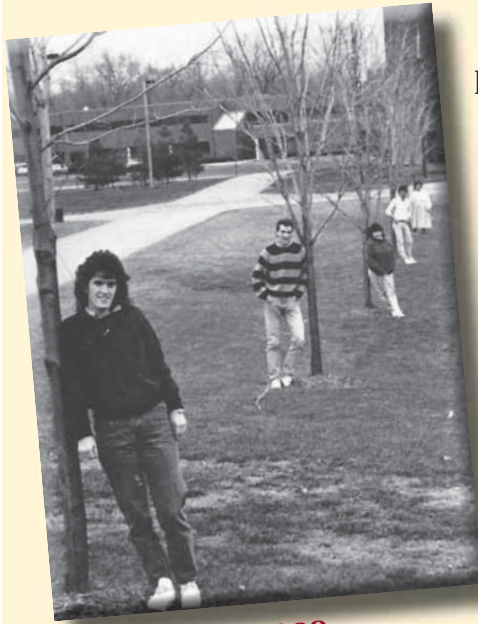

"As an amateur, I began experimenting with object and scenery photography using my Canon Rebel 2000," says Steve. "Today, I still consider myself an amateur and use a combination of digital and film photography, shooting everything from flowers to industrial images. It's just a great feeling to capture stunning images and present them to the world. I enjoy seeing people's reactions and hearing their views."

Steve entered the IT program at SNHU this fall.

From Last Issue . . .

Alumni comments about the “blast from the past” photos published in the Spring 07 newsletter.

1987

left-I was there!”

- Jeff Remillard, '88 RT and '06 CIS, Boscawen. (Jeff’s wife, Deborah, is an IT professor at NHTI!)

“Well, that was funny to see myself in your newsletter.

I am the person on the (right). I studied DH in 1987-88 and have worked as a Hygienist off and on since graduating. I have always been grateful for the wonderful education at NHTI. . . . We were all at the welcoming bonfire party and getting to know our new classmates.”

- Michelle (Cail) Burns, '88, Dental Hygiene, Sandown

1976

“The girl on the far left in the foreground is Dawn Jablonski, the other girl is Lynn Paglierani. They both graduated from the dental hygiene program. The guy to the right of Lynn kneeling is Tom Morancy (MET). He and Lynn were married. . . . I believe the picture was from spring festival. It was fun being able to identify some people. It brought back lots of good memories of the Tech.”

- Mary Mielcarz '77, Nursing, Exeter

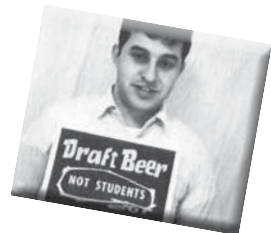

Mike Collier '77, mechanical engineering technology and living in Bedford, identified the man sitting as Bob Boissonneault.

1968

“The person in the photo . . . is Dennis Renaud . . . a fellow dorm resident who was in the EET program. When this photo was taken, students were worried about the possibility of being drafted in the Vietnamese war, particularly upon graduation. The sign he is holding was typical of posters displayed in our dorm rooms as a form of protest and a way of coping with current events of the time. After graduating in 1968, Dennis was employed by IBM in Essex Junction, Vt. I was also employed by IBM in Essex Junction when I graduated. There are many more interesting stories that can be told about dorm life at NHTI in its early years.”

- Norman Rapoport '69, EET, Williston, Vt.

Veni, vidi, vici NHTI group tours Italy

So...what did you do on your summer vacation? One group of NHTI folks spent a portion of the summer conquering the sites of Italy.

Their 10-day "Springtime in Tuscany" adventure began with an 6-week course in Italian language and culture (optional). The itinerary included "must sees" in Rome, Florence and Venice, such as touring the Coliseum, Forum, and The Sistine Chapel. Off-the-beaten-path enhancements included a behind-the-scenes tour of the ruins at Mithraeum of Circus Maximus, a special treat because it is rarely open to visitors.

There was plenty of free time for the travelers to pursue their own interests, whether that was exploring the ruins of a 7th-century port town called Ostia Antica, spending a day at the beach on the Mediterranean, or sipping a cappuccino at a local café and savoring "La Dolce Vita."

The wayfarers also had an opportunity to learn about—and sample!—various wines served in cafes directly from the tanks of San Donato Frattoria in San Gimignano. In Greve, a visit to Castello Di Vicchiomaggio, a 5th-century castle-turned-vineyard, offered our travelers an opportunity to create their own lunch through an extensive cooking class that included pasta making and preparing fresh biscotti for dessert.

The trip culminated with a picturesque drive into the hills of Tuscany and a memorable stay at a little jewel of a farm house located at the very top of a mountain in the famous Chianti region.

Thank You!

Thank you to all the alumni, staff and faculty, corporate sponsors and other friends of the College who gave generously to the first annual Fund for NHTI.

In a time when public funds are decreasing and the cost of providing quality education is outpacing inflation and tuition, these gifts are critical to the College if we are to achieve excellence in the programs and facilities necessary to meet the community's and our students' growing needs. These funds will be used to expand the nursing program, increase general academic space and provide scholarships for needy and deserving students.
